To the brave and resilient individuals who have had to leave their homes behind, in the name of safety, freedom, and a better life. I dedicate this book in solidarity.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Writing a book can be a daunting task, in part because it is a time-consuming mental marathon, involving writing, revising, and hours of research that often culminate in crafting a few short sentences within the manuscript. It can also feel like a lonely process, until one stops to intentionally cultivate appreciation for all of the positive elements that push us forward through the completion of writing projects, or through life in general.

First and foremost, I give thanks to Allah, subhan abn wata'ala (God, the Glorious and Exalted) to be blessed with the opportunity and the resources to complete this project.

I am also very grateful to the support that I received from the DePauw community, namely my students who assisted in compiling and working with some of the data that was used for this study: Niesha Lewis, who helped me compile Spanish news articles, also offered some of her insights on said data at the very start of this project, when it was only meant to be a single article (see Ali, 2024b). Additionally, Nizar Choukri compiled, organized, and translated the Arabic language news articles from Morocco. Part of this study was also supported by DePauw University through the J. William Asher and Dorothy A. Asher Fund in the Social Sciences.

I would also like to express my appreciation to the editorial team at Palgrave: Abarna Antonyraj, Cathy Scott, as well as those with whom I did not have direct contact, but still took the time and energy to move my proposal and then manuscript through its trajectory. I know that the anonymity of the support I received does not stop there: I owe my thanks to the reviewers who also offered up their time and expertise to provide me with feedback on my work, at both the proposal and manuscript stages.

I am also thankful to my colleagues, friends, and mentors. In particular, Sahar Sattarzadeh has been my weekly writing buddy for almost the entirety of this project. I'm so glad I had someone to talk to as I actively worked on this book; it has been a joy to chat about our respective writing projects and learn about each other's research from one session to the next. I am also grateful to Rochelle Compaoré, whose kindness, patience, and gentle spirit have seen me through more than a few rough patches these last few years. I owe my career to John Zemke and the late Flore Zephir, whose mentorship and unwavering support date as far back as my undergraduate days.

And then there are the people who have simply been in my life for so long; their love and support pre-date my career and the conception of this book, and will continue well after its publication. I am grateful to and cherish my family, the whole unruly bunch: My family: Ami (Mom), Daji (Dad), Nani (Granny), Sarah, Jawad, Abrar, Nimra, Abdullah, and Hasan.
